

AMERICAN CIVILIZATION

What is American Civilization? (from <http://www.albright.edu/catalog/history.html#inter>)

The concentration in American Civilization offers a framework for those students who wish to take an interdisciplinary approach to American culture. As it developed in the years following World War II, the American studies movement here and abroad included literary scholars who gave new weight to the historical context of the texts they read, as well as historians eager to move beyond the main lines of political and economic historiography into other fields of endeavor and forms of expression.

“The level of education required for each of the career titles provided varies. Graduates with master's degrees in applied specialties usually are qualified for positions outside of colleges and universities, although requirements vary by field. A Ph.D. may be required for higher-level positions as a historian. A bachelor's degree does, however, provide a suitable background for many different kinds of entry-level jobs in related occupations, such as research assistant, writer, management trainee or market analyst. Many social science students also benefit from internships or field experience. Numerous local museums, historical societies, government agencies, nonprofit and other organizations offer internships or volunteer research opportunities. Archaeological field schools instruct future anthropologists, archaeologists and historians in how to excavate, record and interpret historical sites.” For specific education and preparation required for various careers, refer to www.bls.gov/oco.

How do you get ready? (from <http://career.utk.edu/students/majors.asp>)

- An undergraduate degree in history is good preparation for graduate study in history as well as other areas such as psychology, law or business.
- Research the prerequisites of the area of interest and tailor the program of study to meet curricular and skill needs.
- Part-time, summer, internship and volunteer experiences are critical.
- Develop skills by obtaining a leadership role in a school or community organization.
- Get involved in student government.
- Excellent verbal and written communication skills are imperative for most careers related to history, politics or government.
- Become familiar with the government application process for opportunities in federal, state or local government.
- Prepare to develop a specialty area by including academic training and work experience for history-related careers.
- Develop patience, persistence and drive in obtaining history-related positions.
- For careers in politics, be prepared to volunteer extensively before being hired or elected as an employee or official. Begin by working with a campaign or a public official while in college.
- For careers in arts and humanities, obtain a broad liberal arts background that includes knowledge of the arts, personal and mass communication, and foreign languages.
- Join related social and/or professional organizations.
- Develop a network of both formal and informal contacts.
- Research Websites and books that address various job opportunities, pay structure and hiring processes.

Related Major Skills (from <http://www.uncwil.edu/stuaff/career/Majors/history.htm>)

Explaining ideas	Interpreting events and ideas
Writing and presenting information	Examining evidence
Analyzing ideas and information	Developing a world view
Explaining the present by referring to the past	Decision making
Seeing relationships between factors

“Social scientists need excellent written and oral communication skills to report research findings and to collaborate on research. Successful social scientists also need intellectual curiosity and creativity because they constantly seek new information about people, things and ideas. The ability to think logically and methodically is also essential to analyze complicated issues, such as the relative merits of various forms of government. Objectivity, an open mind and systematic work habits are important in all kinds of social science research. Perseverance, too, is often necessary, as when an anthropologist spends years studying artifacts from an ancient civilization before making a final analysis and interpretation.” (from <http://www.bls.gov/oco/ocos054.htm>).

What about the future?

“Employment of historians is projected to grow about as fast as average for all occupations through the year 2014.” For additional job outlook information, refer to www.bls.gov/oco.
