LIBERAL ARTS OVERVIEW

Many majors, such as Women’s and Gender Studies and Modern Foreign Language, give students experiences they need to succeed in a variety of areas. The Women’s and Gender Studies co-major can give students many skills to thrive in other fields. Students from our Women’s and Gender Studies co-major have also gone into the fields of communications, business, non-profit agencies, and law. Their courses, projects, and involvement have given them “transferable skills,” which are skills that can be used for most careers. Some transferable skills learned by Women’s and Gender Studies majors are written communication, problem solving, understanding of diversity, and public speaking. The core of Women’s and Gender Studies is to better the students’ understanding of their own values. In turn, this helps students feel comfortable working with others who may not have the same values, beliefs, and vision, and helps them to appreciate those with differing views. Students in Women’s and Gender Studies will gain and understanding of themselves and the world around them.

WOMEN’S AND GENDER STUDIES

In both the Women's and Gender Studies (WGS) Minor and the Combined Major, students will learn

- To use gender as an analytical category
- The history of women
- The principles and varieties of feminism both as a political philosophy that shapes activism and a method of analysis in academia
- To explore the diversity of women’s experiences and how race, class, and other aspects of identity interact with gender and sexuality
- How understandings and expressions of masculinity, femininity, gender roles and sexuality are contingent and have changed over time and across culture

Since its inception in 1989, the women's and gender studies curriculum has incorporated a growing number of courses on men and masculinities. Although the majority of women's and gender studies courses emphasize gender in Western societies, one of the goals of this program is to provide a global context and to offer students courses which will define the roles and issues of women and men in non-Western societies.

- Women’s Studies provides a broad, liberal arts background that helps build skills in critical thinking and problem solving, data collection and analysis, oral, written and presentation skills, and cooperative teamwork skills.
- Women’s studies also provides in-depth knowledge of the conditions of women in various cultures and societies; gender dynamics; strategies and organizational skills needed to address gender inequalities, women’s struggles, achievements and contributions in past and present societies and across cultures; the courses and consequences of women's subordination; gender-based assumptions and biases and their consequences; social change agents; and sensitivity to social concerns and other viewpoints.
- Some students may choose to study Women’s Studies because they enjoy the subject but wish to pursue careers requiring “any major.” In this scenario, it is critical to develop desirable skills through internships, part-time or summer jobs, or volunteer experiences.
- Women’s Studies majors are excellent candidates for a number of graduate school options because of their broad liberal arts background as well as specific interests that may set them apart from other students. For those wishing to pursue graduate education, maintain a high GPA and establish relationships with faculty to secure strong recommendations, and gain experience through volunteer, work or research opportunities.

What about the future?

“Employment of social and community service managers is projected to grow 21 percent from 2012 to 2022, faster than the average for all occupations. In addition, employment growth is projected as more people seek treatment for their addictions and as illegal drug offenders are increasingly sent to treatment programs rather than to jail. As a result, managers who direct treatment programs will be needed. Although this occupation is projected to have rapid employment growth, gains could be limited by budget cuts in state and local governments. Social and human services rely heavily on government funding, and if funding decreases, services may not grow fast enough to meet demand.”
